

Dr. Gianluigi Condorelli graduated cum laude in Medicine at the University “Federico II”, Naples, Italy and received a PhD in Cardiovascular Sciences from the University “Tor Vergata”, Rome, in 1993; he is board-certified in cardiology and trained in molecular cardiology at Harvard University, Boston and molecular oncology at Thomas Jefferson University, Philadelphia; he has been faculty at Thomas Jefferson University, Philadelphia and at the University of California San Diego, La Jolla, director of the Department of Medicine the National Research Council of Italy and is currently professor and director of the post-graduate school of cardiology at Humanitas University and Head of the Department of Cardiovascular Medicine at the Humanitas Research Hospital. His research focuses on the molecular mechanisms of heart failure; in particular, he studied the role of non coding RNAs and epigenetics in the regulation of gene expression in normal and diseased heart.